WAGOLL Teaching
Blog

The initiative

WAGOLLs blog started by two teachers, Ben and Sophie Cooper, in order to share good practices, tips and teaching methodologies with other educators with the goal to broaden the variety of ideas and resources available to teachers. Based on their blog 'As a teaching group, we need to stick together, support each other and develop positive approaches to classroom innovation. Development is all about trying something new, taking risks and sharing great ideas!'

Areas of Focus

- Sharing innovative and simple teaching ideas with the global teaching community
- Professional development and adopting new teaching approaches
- Networking and exchange of practices between teachers and trainers.

Outcomes to date

WAGOLLS blog offers opportunities for educators to exchange good practices and get developed professionally through a variety of available resources such as articles, vlogs, podcasts etc. shared among the community of teachers. The blog can act as a Professional Learning Network used by teachers to innovate their practices through sharing.

Origins

United Kingdom, Online

Why it's relevant to AGILTe

This case study presents a great example of professional learning network through the development of a learning blog. Online professional learning networks (PLN) can offer an easy and accessible way for educators to develop their skills anytime and anywhere. PLN can innovate educators' practices, whilst saving both money and time.

REFLECTION & DISCUSSION POINTS

- How do you plan your professional development?
- Do you network with other teachers and exchange good practices?
- Do you use technology to showcase your work or share a good practice with other colleagues?
